

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1745.

Madrid, January 30.

THE Changes we expected in the Ministry appear every Day nearer at Hand. The Conde de Montijo has obtained the Employment vacant by the Death of the Duke d'Attri; and all the Dependents on the old Administration are coming in again upon every Vacancy. The Duke de Monte-believed to be at the Head of all Military Affairs, it is said, will command the Army under Don Philip next Campaign in Piedmont. As the Marquis de la Mina, he is completely disgraced by the Articles of his Enemies, and the Intention of the Government, who never enquired whether the Government of Galicia would be acceptable to him, or not, the Patent was sent him for it. On the Receipt of the Patent some warm Expressions to escape him, enough to be echo'd hither. The King was incensed at his refusing that Government, and sent him saying, This Man would not be satisfied with a Command to which he is not equal, and now a Government where he might be happy. Orders were sent to the Intendants of Catalonia, to have ready for the March of the Forces destined to meet the Army of Don Philip. They are all to be clothed, paid up to the Day of their March, furnished with new Arms, Tents, and other Necessaries. A Regiment of 33 Squadrons, and 18 Battalions, as fine as, and in as good Order, as Men can be. We besides, Nine thousand Recruits for that Army. The Forces commanded by the Count de Gages, providing for an Embarkment of Ten or Twelve Men to reinforce him, either from Barcelona or Tarragona. This, it is said, will take Place some time in March; and Vessels are actually assembling for that purpose. M. de Encenada says our Gallies have been sent to the Mouth of the Ebro, and are now at Valerías; all our Schemes are well laid; and we are more eager than ever to put them in Execution; but it is thought, if that Minister durst open his Mouth freely, he would say, our Treasure could not other Way be so well laid out, as in the Pursuit of a good Peace.

February 4. We are, at present, wholly taken up with the Rejoicings made for the happy Delivery of the Queen, our Sovereign; who, as well as the young Prince, is as well as can be expected. The Hon. Countess de Brühl, since her Arrival in Spain, has been so extraordinary, that every body is amazed. The Day of the last Month, her Majesty ordered a Course of Sledges; when his Royal Highness the Prince of Asturias, conducted the Countess's Sledge; and she was likewise present, tho' she did not stay on account of her being so near her Time. The Day fixed for Marshal Count de Königsegg's departure, who, 'tis said, will go first to Dresden, then to the Hague, and so to Brussels, and the Army. The Countess of Field-Marshal Count Traun is again put off a Week, his Presence being still requisite in Moravia. Baron Trenck sets out this Day Post for Sclavia, in order to complete his Corps of Irregulars. All the Regular Troops that were in the Kingdom of Hungary, have Orders to march for Italy, and we are sending daily Recruits in wait of Horses for remounting the Cavalry, and what is requisite for enabling the Army of Prince Eugene to take the Field early in the Spring. General Maffei is expected here shortly from Turin; and it is whispered, that an Application has been made to the Emperor, to have Field-Marshal Count Traun sent back again into Italy; where he formerly did with so much Glory to himself, and so much to the Common Cause.

February 19. Instructions have been sent to the Elector of Saxony, to declare, 'That the High Mightinesses look upon the Conclusion of a Treaty of Alliance, sign'd at Warsaw, on the 8th of January, as an Event extremely advantageous, and since the Death of the late Emperor, the Confidence, are thereby settled on the most solid Foundation, between those four Powers, that are, or others, the most interested in the restoring of the Empire, and preserving the Liberties of Europe; that their High Mightinesses promised, without Hesitation, in the present delicate Situation, that his Polish Majesty, as Elector of Saxony, will concert with Great Britain, the Queen of Hungary, and their High Mightinesses, as contracting Parties, and their High Allies, on the Measures fit to be taken for their common Benefit and Advantage; and particularly, on the Share which they ought to take on this important Event of the Death of the Emperor, for putting an End to the present Troubles, and re-establishing the Tranquillity of the Empire, and of Europe; towards which, their High Mightinesses are sincerely disposed to contribute to the utmost of their Power. That, in Consequence thereof, their High Mightinesses reckon on the Return of the like Confidence; not doubting in the least, that his Polish Majesty will communicate freely with his High Allies, in regard to the ensuing Election; abstaining from any Engagement whatever upon that Head, till they have concerted together what may be most proper to be done for the Advantage of each, as well as of the Common Cause. Their High Mightinesses being determined in this, and in all their other Views, not by particular, or private Motives, but by such only as may contribute most to advance the general Good, and give a happy Issue to the Common Cause. The like Instructions have been sent to M. Burinanna at Vienna; to Count Wassenae de Twickello, who is going to the Court of Cologne; to the Baron de Ayva, who is employ'd in negotiating with the Ecclesiastical Electors; and to their Minister at the British Court. In Support of these Instructions, and to give Weight to their Mediation, their High Mightinesses have determin'd to proceed immediately to a considerable Augmentation of their Forces by Sea and Land.

EXTRACT from the PREFACE.
The Beauty and Elevation of his Style is equal to the Greatness and Glory of the People whose Story he writes: He is every where luminous, intelligible, and agreeable; but when he enters into important Affairs, he rises even above himself, to treat them with peculiar Attention, and a Kind of Self-delights and Complacency. He renders the Action he describes present;
he sets it before the Eyes; he does not relate it, he shows it.
He paints the Genius and Character of Personages he brings upon the Stage after Nature; and puts into their Mouths Words which are always conformable to their Sentiments and different Situations. In short, he has the wonderful Art of keeping his Readers in so pleasing a Suspense by the Variety of Events, and to engage their Curiosity so strangely, that they cannot quit his Relation of an Incident, till it is entirely at an End.
Printed for T. Osborne in Gray's-Inn.
